On "Obama defends massive spying on Americans"

It's a secret. Let it stay so. A secret court is requested in secret, to give a secret decree, to a secret government to find something secret about the people which will be secret to the government.

And if the government doesn't like the secrets of any people, a secret operation will secretly whisk away somebody in the night. You might hear it: a yelp, a shout, a call.

But, the operative mentality is, "If you're not doing anything wrong, you got nothin' to worry about." Keep yourself dumb. Keep yourself content. Keep yourself watching the television, entertained and happy. That's how they like their slaves and cannon fodder.

On "NSA whistleblower reveals identity, exposes US government's 'architecture of oppression'"

As the United States advances further down the path to the status of police state, the Kafkaesque nature of the rationalizations for the spying on American citizens by Obama and his supporters becomes more disturbing with each passing day. The spying is "necessary" to protect American citizens from "terrorists." The massive abuses of international law that are the defining feature of American foreign policy and that create those "terrorists" from whom Americans need protecting is ignored by the media.

Meanwhile, the spying goes on essentially unregulated. Whistleblowers such as Edward Snowden have revealed the scope of the spying. Legislation gives the NSA the "power" to engage in the spying. Organizations such as the ACLU, however, are denied the right to challenge legality/constitutionality of the legislation that "empowers" the spying on the basis that these organizations lack standing as the people they seek to represent can't know if they have actually suffered a harm due to the secrecy of the legislation.

Meanwhile, each evening the media gives us interviews with NSA and military personnel seeking to rationalize the spying on the basis that we have already been protected from attacks by the aforementioned "terrorists" but they can't tell us when, where, or how so we need to simply trust the very people who seek to overturn the free speech and due process protections of the Bill of Rights. Who needs theatre of the absurd when we have the evening news!

On "Building collapse in Philadelphia exposes corruption, lack of government oversight"

Thank you for running a follow up piece on this tragedy. When I lived in Philadelphia, I frequented that Salvation Army regularly and was heartbroken to hear about the shoppers and employees killed by criminally negligent developers.

Just like the West, Texas explosion, there has been an attempt to pin the problem on a low-level patsy, but the roots of these tragedies go straight back to the ruthless demands of capital and complicity of capitalist government.

On "Once again, on the filthiness of the makers of Zero Dark Thirty"

Very well reported, David. A defense of the methods of a decayed class, using art as the medium to appeal to conflicting emotions of a public that is trying to come to terms with the deterioration of democracy—this is how I interpret the movie.
