On September 8, the official web site of the RIO prominently featured an interview with Sarah Moayeri, the candidate of the Left Party for the Berlin constituency of Neukölln 1. RIO operates in the environment of the Left Party and the trade unions and is internationally part of the "Trotskyist Fraction—Fourth International (FT-CI)." Moayeri is a member of Socialist Alternative (SAV), a pseudo-left grouping that has been part of the Left Party for a number of years. She is the representative of the group on the Left Party executive.

The aim of Wladek Flakin, who conducted the interview for RIO, and Moayeri is quite straightforward. They are desperately trying to mobilise support for a party seeking to enter government at the state and federal level as part of a so-called red-red-green (SPD-Left Party- Green Party) coalition, a party that implements the same anti-working class and anti-social policies as the SPD and Greens and is despised by broad layers of the population.

At one point, the RIO admits: "The Left Party in Berlin does not have particularly good reputation. It was in government (in Berlin) between 2001-11 and privatised everything that was not nailed to the floor. Will it be confronted with this heritage during the election campaign? Or is that forgotten?" Moayeri answered: "Of course, we are confronted with it. People do not forget 100,000 privatised apartments or the elimination of 35,000 public service jobs, all of this did indeed impact dramatically on people's lives."

To justify their support for the Left Party, Wladek Flakin who conducted the interview for RIO, and Moayeri introduce an argument that is hard to beat when it comes to cynicism and absurdity. After Flakin established that "the Berlin Left Party under Klaus Lederer wants to be part of a red-red-green coalition at any cost," Moayeri asserted, "The people who vote for me are those who do not vote for red-red-green, but rather for a voice of movements and social struggles."

Do the pair assume the electorate are idiots? It is obvious that a vote for the candidate of a party that privatised everything "not nailed to the floor" and that wants to be "to be part of a red-red-green coalition at any cost," is not a voice for "social struggles," but rather a voice for social cutbacks and Lederer's objective of joining a coalition government!

among other things for a massive build-up of the Berlin police.

The programme says, “In particular, in buses and trains and at stations in public transport” there must be “additional security staff.” The section headed “Improve the working conditions of police” states that the “basis for police to carry out their duties responsibly, is sound training and equipment. Therefore it is necessary...to employ more police officers.”

Flakin’s penchant for the Neuköllner Left, the SAV and Moayeri, whom he describes as “a left activist in the Left Party,” underlines the RIO’s own reactionary political role. Behind its official call, “to cast an invalid vote on September 18” and “create a front of the anti-capitalist left,” is not the building of an independent revolutionary party of the working class, but rather the political orientation of the pseudo-left swamp to the right-wing policy of the Left Party and the entire red-red-green and trade union milieu.
