Trump and Brexit: For a socialist opposition to economic nationalism

11 February 2017

The eruption of mass demonstrations against the Donald Trump administration, involving millions of people, is politically and historically unprecedented. It is an initial indication of the crisis-ridden character of the new US government and the immense social upheavals to come.

The fight against Trump is a fight against capitalism and all of its political representatives. It depends on the education, organisation and mobilisation of workers in every country of the world against a social and economic system rooted in inequality and exploitation—a system that is driving humanity toward catastrophe.

The Socialist Equality Party is leading this struggle, in alliance with our American co-thinkers and all sections of the International Committee of the Fourth International. We are entering a period of mass radicalisation and unprecedented political struggles.
