

Students in El Paso, Texas speak about life on the US-Mexico border

Zac Corrigan, Genevieve Leigh
1 March 2017

Mexican-American high school students in El Paso, Texas talk about what life is like on the second busiest US-Mexico border crossing. They express opposition to Trump's wall and his government's campaign of fear.

Those interviewed are defiant against the police state policies of Trump and speak of their desire for a better world without borders.
