The class issues in Britain's snap election: Austerity, dictatorship and war

19 May 2017

If Conservative Prime Minister Theresa May is re-elected on June 8 as expected, workers face the fight of their lives. They must defy not only the government, but also the Labour Party and the trade unions—who will do everything possible to sabotage any and all resistance. Jeremy Corbyn, whose loyalties are to the labour bureaucracy, will never lead such a struggle.

This is the time for decisive political action, not half measures and evasions.

Workers are in the middle of an undeclared class war. They face being dragged into a real shooting war—against Syria, North Korea, even against Russia and China—while told to rely on the moral conscience of one man, Jeremy Corbyn, to protect them.

This situation cannot be allowed to continue. Workers and young people need their own genuinely socialist and internationalist party, the Socialist Equality Party, and they must commit themselves to building it.
