Workers and young people attending a Socialist Equality Party (SEP) rally late last month in Parramatta, in Sydney's western suburbs, speak out in defence of WikiLeaks publisher and journalist Julian Assange.

The rally was addressed three SEP election candidates—Oscar Grenfell, who is contesting the Parramatta lower-house seat, and Richard Phillips and John Davis who running for NSW Senate seats—and SEP National Committee member Nick Beams. James McGlone, who is a friend of Assange's father, also spoke.
