Beams will outline the contemporary significance of the Russian Revolution, the first time the working class overthrew capitalism and began the reorganisation of social and economic life in its own interests.

He will outline the burning relevance of this event for the situation confronting millions of people today. It is clear that capitalist governments are incapable of, and uninterested in, protecting the lives and livelihoods of ordinary people amid the coronavirus pandemic. Their criminally-negligent response, along with decades of public spending cuts, has created a global health crisis. At the same time, governments are handing out massive sums of money to major corporations, as they lay off workers and cut conditions.

The situation underscores the pressing need for a revolutionary movement of the working class aimed at the socialist transformation of society on a global scale.

Beams, who has played a leading role in the world Trotskyist movement for over 45 years will refute the claims that the Stalinist regime in the Soviet Union represented the continuity of the October Revolution. He will explain that it embodied a counter-revolutionary and nationalist reaction to the revolutionary struggles of the working class, based on the interests of a privileged bureaucratic caste.
