Are you an autoworker? Send us a report on the spread and impact of COVID-19 in your plant using the form below. Help break through the lies of the companies and the UAW. We will protect your anonymity.

Autoworker and grandmother Catherine Pace died on March 27, 2020 after contracting COVID-19 in the paint department at the Warren Truck Plant outside Detroit, then operated by Fiat-Chrysler, now Stellantis.

In this video testimony for the Global Workers' Inquest into the COVID-19 Pandemic, Catherine's family describes the working conditions that have led to her death and the deaths of countless other autoworkers during the still-raging pandemic.

They demand that Chrysler/Stellantis be held accountable, and they call on other workers to step forward and expose the criminal and deadly practices of the auto companies and the UAW.
